

I have been deeply concerned for some time about the lack of variety and objectivity in American Media. Many changes to FCC regulations go unnoticed by citizens because they are often done without much public visibility or debate. The FCC used to limit the number of media outlets that could be owned by one company and those regulations protected the public's access to diversified voices. Sometime in the past 20-30 years those regulations have gone by the way side and the result has been biased media and lack of choice. With the internet, globalization and corporate control of business, those controls seem far more important than ever. The FCC should act in the best interests of the public who pays for it, not the media conglomerates.

Thank you.
